Part 2 — Short Answer (Sample Answers)

11. Pausing and breathing helps you calm down so you don't react with anger or emotion. It gives you time to think clearly before responding.
12. Headlines are often exaggerated or misleading. Reading the whole article helps you understand the real facts.
13. It means you should make sure something is true by checking evidence or reliable sources before sharing it online.

14. A lot of likes doesn't mean something is true — it just means it's popular. People click "like" for many reasons, not accuracy.
15. Asking questions helps you slow down, check facts, and avoid believing or spreading something that isn't true.

Part 3 — Extended Response (Sample Answer)

16. This post is probably not true because social media likes do not control school funding or playground construction. Scroll Zombie Zack might share it without thinking, Headline Harry might believe it without reading further, and Re-Post Robot might share it instantly. A Media Master would check the school's official website or ask a trusted adult before believing or sharing the post. They would Stop, Think, and Check before clicking.
